Since they are of different scales (based on the number of users), I'm trying to measure things like slow requests, the average time to process a request, etc. I'd like to be able to create a dashboard which shows these metrics for each application. What metrics would you suggest to have? Some of the applications are running in a web farm, so a lot of the profiling involves things like waiting for a thread-pool thread to get to the requested page. We are using Zend Framework. Thanks A: You should use a profiler. But probably the most important thing is to measure all requests and group them by number of requests. So you want to be able to see something like: # of requests logged: 1000 average response time: 5 seconds (with a standard deviation of 1.5 seconds) # of requests finished within 12 seconds: 15 In each group measure the pages time and user count. AP Titans defensive end Derrick Morgan has been cleared to return to action. The two-time Pro Bowler missed the first six games of the season with a knee injury but made his season debut on Sunday against the Bills. Morgan recorded six tackles and one sack for the win. "It feels great," Morgan said after the game. "I'm happy to get back out there and play with my teammates." Morgan's return has been a long time coming. He has played just 16 snaps all season and his performance, both against Buffalo and in the preseason, has been a stark contrast to his potential as a pass rusher. Morgan had missed the final two games of the preseason with an ankle injury and it appeared f678ea9f9e
